Space Station program manager Holloway to retire

Tommy Holloway, manager of the International Space Station Program Office at Johnson Space Center in Houston, announced plans to retire on July 3. Holloway's deputy, William H. Gerstenmaier, will take over as program manager. Holloway began his NASA career in 1963, planning activities for Gemini and Apollo flights. He was named Space Station manager in 1999. Gerstenmaier joined the Space Shuttle program in 1980 as a propulsion flight controller. He was selected deputy manager of the Space Station program in 2000.
